^{*} Islamic Collections housed in recent new, reorganized, or reconstructed buildings or galleries

New or completely re-conceptualized museums and museum galleries of Islamic art and culture have recently opened in London, New York, Detroit, Qatar, Brunei, Paris, Toronto, Istanbul, Vienna and Houston, and Berlin will join the parade in a few years. Some of these efforts have been applauded as great successes, while others have met with less enthusiasm from critics and the public. What can we learn from these experiences?

Takrit Samarra Bagdad

1 Vantail de porte Irak, Samarra, 9° siècle Bois sculpté

Le vantail viendrait du palais d'al-Mu'tasim; il présente des similitudes avec le décor en marbre et sruc de la salle du trône. Il est sculpté de profonds défoncements (style «en biseau»). Son décor se compose d'un motif en éventail s'achevant par une feuille lobée. Le reste de la surface est saturé d'éléments en relief. Ce vantail formait une porte avec un autre conservé à Athènes (musée Benaki). Ils furent réemployés à Takrit (nord de Samarra) pour le cercueil de deux évêques assyro-chaldéens.

1 Door leaf

Iraq, Samarra, 9th c. Carved wood

The panel probably comes from the palace of al-Mu'tasim; it bears similarities with the marble and succo decoration of the throne room. It features deeply incised carvings ("bevelled style"), consisting of a fan-shaped motif ending in a lobed leaf. Relief elements cover the remainder of the surface. The door leaf has a matching one now in Athens (Benaki Museum). They were reused in Tikrit (north of Samarra) for the coffin of two Assyrian-Chaldean bishops.

Hoja de puerta

Iraq, Samarra, siglo 1x Madera tallada

Se cree que esta hoja de puerta pertenece al palacio de al-Mu'asim a causa de su similitud con la decoración de mármol y estuco de la sala del trono. Está profundamente tallada (estilo «a bisel»), con um notivo e a banico que termina en una hoja lobulada. El resto de la superficie está cargado de elementos en relieve. Esta hoja de puerta forma pareja con la que se conserva en Atenas (museo Benaki). Ambas se aprovecharon en Takrit (norte de Samarra) para el féretro de dos obispos caldeo-astrios.
